Police Drills.

Because of the interest manifested in police matters by Commissioner Black, the police have resumed their drills. Soon after Capt. Black was designated to act as Commissioner he noticed the appearance of some of the officers on their beats, and addressed a communication to Major Moore. Among other things he noticed that on Pennsylvania avenue some of the officers lounged against lamp posts and the corners of buildings, and this he thought, might be improved upon. Soon after the receipt of this letter the police received instructions to resume the drills, and they are now held twice a week.

NAMES OF STREETS

Justice Hagner Proposes a Plan to Columbia Historical Society.

NAMES OF DISTINGUISHED MEN

Confusion of Sound Caused by Lettered Streets.

WASHINGTON AVENUE

Justice A. B. Hagner of the Suprem Court of the District of Columbia read a paper upon "National Nomenclature of Streets for the Nation's Capital" before the Columbia Historical Society last night. It was an appreciative and interested audience that gathered in the lecture hall of Columbian University and listened to the expression of Justice Hagner's ideas upon this subject. He said in part: "There can be no greater boon to a city han spacious and convenient streets and avenues. They stand for its arteries and veins, as the public parks do for its lungs. But their value is incomplete unless there exists an orderly and methodical system of suitable names, so arranged as to enable the resident and the stranger within his gates to ascertain for themselves, and without needless trouble or delay, the relative positions of the different highways through which they may be called to pass on busiwhich they may be called to pass on business or pleasure. And while designing such a system for the streets of the capital of the foremost nation of the world, it is eminently proper they should be dignified by the names of the builders of the nation and city, and thus a continual reminder be and city, and thus a continual reminder be presented to old and young of the history of the capital in which they live.

"Mean streets deserve and will generally receive mean names. Hogarth has immortalized Gin Lane and the Seven Dials; but they were quite as refined appellations as Cow Lane, Hog Alley, Paddy's Alley and Black Horse Lane, which were the accepted names of much-used thoroughfares in Boston at the revolutionary period. Fortuton at the revolutionary period. Fortu-nately the city of Washington never fell heir to such perplexing inheritance of disneir to such perpiexing inheritance of dis-order, and whatever discomforts and blem-ishes of this description exist here are the results of our own negligent administration of the trust confided to us.

The First Order.

"As all are aware, it was the hand of the ir comparable Washington that directed the erganization of the city in whose establishnent he took such constant interest. His last official act as President, on the 3d of March, 1797, was to address a communica-March, 1797, was to address a communica-tion to the commissioners on several im-portant matters connected with the public buildings and streets. As late as 1791 he had suppressed his own name in speaking of what he always called the "Federal City," though the people of the country had long before agreed upon a more appropriate appellation. But in September of that year Messrs, Johnson, Stewart and Carroll the Messrs. Johnson, Stewart and Carroll, the first commissioners of the new district, ad-dressed the following letter to Major L'Enfant, from Georgetown:

fant, from Georgetown:

"Sir: We have agreed that the federal district shall be called "The Territory of Columbia," and the federal city "The City of Washington;" the title of the map will therefore be "A Map of the City of Washington, in the Territory of Columbia."

"We have also agreed that the streets "We have also agreed that the streets shall be named alphabetically one way and numerically the other, the former divided into north and south letters, the latter into major Ellicott, with proper assistance, will mmediately take and soon furnish you with soundings of the Eastern branch, to be inserted in the map. We expect he will also furnish you with the direction of the proposed post road, which we wish to have noticed in the map.

Numbers and Letters. "In accordance with this order, the streets were laid out, except that J street was omitted from the lettered streets doubtless to prevent confusion from the extremest lettered street, both north and south, was named W: the farthest to the east of the numbered streets was 31st and the fartnest to the west, 26th. "So far as the numbered nomenclature of the streets is concerned, the system was excellent when adopted, and cannot be im-proved now. But the application of the alphabetical system to the lettered streets, although in the right direction, soon developed inconveniences which have con-tinued to increase, and which should now be corrected without further delay. Blun-ders and absurdities long endured become ders and absurdities long endured become so indurated that correction is often well nigh impossible; and so the gay equestrians of London will continue to gather along Rotten Row, and the busy crowds will throng Pall Mall with only a hopeless laugh at the absurdity of the names. Fortunately, in Washington, we are in full time to make the proper corrections without running counter to the inveterate habits of centuries.

"It is evident the proposed plan of naming the streets, so far as the numbers are concerned, was adopted from the city of Philadelphia, which was then the seat of government. From that city also were derived many of the existing building regulations for the new capital, first promulgated by President Washington in October, 1791. Philadelphia was then by far the most important city in the United States, excelling New York in population, wealth and refinement; and the regularity its of centuries. wealth and refinement; and the regularity of its plan was almost unique.

Sound Alike.

"Much of what I shall say may have already occurred to those who have given any thought to the subject, and the par ticular suggestions I shall make by way of remedy were presented perhaps ten to The Evening Star. The similarity in sound of nearly one-third of the names of the lettered streets (being eight out of twenty-two) when spoken rapidly, causes constant and serious confusion and mis-takes—B, C, D, E, G, P, T and V to ordinary ears, may well be confounded, as takes—B, C, D, E, G, P, T and V to ordinary ears may well be confounded, as they incessantly are.

"Any one who stands near a telephone when a message is being transmitted will probably hear, first the tiresome repetitions of the particular street letter, required by the clerk of the sender, then follow the inevitable inquiries of the receiver, as to whether the sender meant to call B street or C street, or some other of the eight whose names sound so much alike, and lastly, the colloquy of the clerks at the two ends of the line, repeating to each other several letters of the alphabet before they have arrived at a satisfactory understanding on the point.

"When one considers that the annoyance with which he has thus become acquainted is but one of a number of similar delays that constantly happen at that particular instrument, and that similar annoyances are happening at every instrument all over the city, he can begin to understand the extent of the general inconvenience. The like troubles result from the similarity of sound of the letters M, L and N, and of H and 8, A and K and U and W and I and Y. But to appreciate fully the bother one must also observe what frequently occurs in any ccurt in the city where the residence of a witness—such misunderstandings forming the rule rather than the exception. Of course from the same causes repeated mistakes occur in the direction and delivery of letters and in the daily talk of hundreds of people. When all these drawbacks are considered, it must certainly be admitted that they rise to the importance of a very great nuisance, that should be promptly abated. The original application of the alphabet to these streets at the time they were named afforded a valuable suggestion to be improved upon in the future, but it could scarcely have been intended as a permanent arrangement.

"The continued application to great thoroughfares, 100 to 160 feet in width and scarcely have been intended as a permanent arrangement.

"The continued application to great thoroughfares, 100 to 100 feet in width and many miles in length, of such insignificant designations as B or C, or K street, would seem to indicate a poverty of conception and of taste, a lack of dignity and a want of appreciation of the importance of the city among the great capitals of the earth, that today would scarcely be espected in the genesis of a petty village, boomed into a short life by a moon-madness of specula-

Names of Americans. "An obvious and easy remedy is to sub stitute for the several letters affixed to the streets the names of eminent Americans beginning with the corresponding letters. thus preserving all the benefits of an alphabetical arrangement, while removing all phabetical arrangement, while removing all the objections we have been considering. The troubles from the similarity of names would entirely cease, while the streets would be adorned by designations bearing perpetual testimony of the gratitude of the republic toward its great benefactors.

"I suggest there should be applied to the streets running east and west in the original city, in the first place, the names of the Presidents, then of the Vice Presidents, then of the Vice Presidents, then of the chief justices of the Supreme Court and afterward of the Speakers of the House of Representatives and of the more distinguished members of the different cabdistinguished members of the different cab-inets and of celebrated military characters, as far as possible excluding the names of living persons, and when these sources of supply become exhausted, to admit the names of other distinguished officials, in-cluding the earlier mayors of the city; in all cases adopting first from the list of offi-cials of the same grade the names of those who were earliest in service and applying the first choice to the streets in the most thickly settled portion of the city, north of Pennsylvania avenue.

There can be no more enduring and dignified form of recognition of a nation's gratitude to its benefactors than to affix their names to portions of the country it-celf. I propose also that the authorities shall abolish the incorrect and undignified addition of the words "north" and "south" to different parts of the same lettered street. The practice is incorrect, because no lettered street north of Pennsylvania avenue has any more connection with one particular lettered street south of that avenue than it has with any other lettered Justice Hagner read the list of names proposed to be applied, selected as outlined without a supplementary clause changing the names of sundry small streets not laid down on the original plat, but to which have been applied, with very slender show of authority, I am inclined to think, some of the great names which are included in the lists I have read. A very serious em-barrassment to visitors as well as to residents in a city results from such duplication of names to the streets. No one who has not examined the subject can realize what had progress we have already made in this direction in Washington. I find that of the names of Presidents and others included in above. Continuing, he said:

the foregoing list (reckoning alleys, courts, places, roads and streets), the name of Jackson, Jefferson, Johnson and Washington each appears three times; of Lin-coln, Pierce and Grant each five times, and of Madison seven times; and there are of Madison seven times; and there are many repetitions of other names to a lesser extent. It is time this form of mischief should be stopped, and this, too, can only be accomplished by a legislative enactment. "As the present suggestions are intended only to apply to the streets within the city of the streets within the city of the streets within the city as it was originally lead out it is proposed. as it was originally laid out, it is proposed to provide now only for the change of names within the municipality as now existing, where they conflict with those sug-gested in our list, leaving the rectification of other cases of the kind to the action of the Commissioners when they shall under take to affix suitable names to the streets outside of the city proper, which they have been authorized to do by an existing stat-

"A practicable and not difficult change would convert W street into one of the most important avenues of the city. It will be seen from the plat that the old Bound-ary street, now called Florida avenue, meets W street north first at its western extremity, after which it makes a loop to the north and east, in the course of which it again strikes W street at its eastern end. If the name of Florida avenue, widened to the breadth of our widest thoroughfares, were changed to Washington avenue, and made to run straight through W street, and thence pursue its route eastwardly with the course of that avenue to the Eastern branch, the city would be encircled on the north by a grand girdle properly adorned by the name of him who guarded the whole by the name of him who guarded the whole country while he lived.

"The name would be peculiarly appropriate, as there is no thoroughfare within the limits of the city which has been so frequently traversed by General Washington as this; in fact, no other mode of passing over the bed of the present city existed until the establishment of the city streets."

Splendid Exhibition of Fancy Dane jng at the Academy of Music. There have been a good many exhibition of fancy dancing given in this city during past years, but the May ball of E. Mortimer Caruana's pupils at the Academy of Music last night completely eclipsed any of the kind that has ever been put before a Washington audience. Everything that could possibly and to the effectiveness of the dances was in evidence; the costumes were magnificent; the arrangement of the lights was perfect, while the children themselves were as much without fault as it is selves were as much without fault as it is possible for a child dancer to be.

There were several special features given last night that deserve more than ordinary attention. The serpentine dance of Miss Marie Howe was as fine a piece of work of the kind as has ever been seen here, either by professional or amateur. Her management of the yards and yards of silk that made up her costume was superb. while the arrangement of the lights could not have been better. Mr. Harry Park gave an exhibition of trick bicycle riding that was appreciated, and the Madrids were warmly received in mandolin and guitar selections. Miss Howe also won favor with the "Chicken Song," and with a recitation which she gave to an emphatic encore of the former feature. Isabel Shelton, a diminutive miss, was recalled again ton, a diminutive miss, was recalled again and again for her character songs, and made one of the best impressions of the made one of the best impressions of the evening. It is impossible to go into details with regard to the dancing. Caruana has always made a specialty of group dances, but last night he outdid all his former efforts in this direction, as to costumes, arrangement, novelty and effect. Among these should be mentioned the "Revel of the Demons," the French quadrille dancers, "La Petit Ballet," the Cupids' ballet, the court minuet, which was the first feature on the program; the Turkish ballet, the Spanish ballet and the "Sallors' Hornpipe" class. One of the most pleasing of these groups was the two-face character dance, it being original with Caruana and a decided novelty.

Gave a Birthday Social. Burnside Corps celebrated its eighth anniversary by giving a "birthday social" at Maccabee Temple, near the corner of 9th and F streets. Thursday evening of this week, and the occasion was made memor able, the hall being filled by the friends of the corps. Each guest brought a small bag, containing the number of pennies representing his or her age, in which was also included, in many instances, a verse of poetry, giving the sentiments of each touching the effort thus made to discover the age of the donor. A handsome addition was made to the relief fund of the corps, whereby it can continue the good work for which it was organized.

The report of the president showed that $3,500 had been expended by the corps during its existence. The department commander of the G. A. R., Thos. S. Hopkins, was present with his staff, and eloquently expressed his appreciation of the work of the corps in alleviating the distress of his comrade

Remarks in the same line were made by Dr. Raub, senior vice department comnander; Department Chaplain W. H. Black, Past Department Commander Nathan Bickford, Post Commanders Ross, Vanderhoef The program consisted of: Songs, by Miss Lena Shepard; violin solo, by Miss Jessle Cowling; recitation, by Mr. Lower, and a song by Miss Brockett, after which cream and cake were furnished to all present.

Health was Greatly Impaired, but Hood's Up--Sores Have All Disappeared.

"I was troubled with eruptions on my face, which appeared like scrofula. My bealth was so much impaired that I was advised to take Hood's Sarsaparilla to found that I was improving. I could rest found that I was improving. I could rest better at night, and felt refreshed in the norning. I gained in flesh and when I had fluished the six bottles the sores on my face had all disappeared." J. B. BODDIE, Postmaster, Nashville, No. Carolina. "After suffering from a sore leg for 25 years four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla made a complete cure. It is several years since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, but I have not suffered with any sore or erysipelas in that time." Mrs. M. J. HARTLEY, Lovett, Georgia." Remember,
